some of the sober truths uttered by him;

The last armed host of the rebellion almost a year ago fell before the gallant advance of the federal army, led by its great leaders. Then had there been a proper course pursued, had the American people and the heads of the Government realized the great fact that the foe we had conquered in the field were only subdued by arms, we might have finished the victory at once. But a mistake was committed. In the language of the President of the United States, "mercy to those misguided men who led those terrible onslaughts against liberty has proved, in my judgment, treason to the State." Through a misguided philauthropy through that great leniency which fills the hearts of Americans to forgive the past, we find ourselves to-day with our country agitated almost to as great an extent as it was when we were plunged in the midst of war. We find to-day, not what we found one year ago, a people only asking that they might be allowed to pursue their avocations, under whatever laws we, who were victors, might prescribe for their government; but we find an arrogant party of men, who have committed treason, with the Government again turned over into their hands. Therefore, I say I am still in the field, and, for one, if I am asked again to trust the reins of Government in their hands, no matter who may falter in the contest, my voice will ever be heard against it. [Immense applause.] the field, and, for only again to trust the reins of Government in their hands, no matter who may fall the in the contest, my voice will over be heard against it. [Immense applause.] I don't desire vengeance. I simply ask that justice may be done. Like the President of the United States, I consider treason to be the greatest of crimes—one deserving the severest punishment, that the people of this land should be taught a lesson, and that treason should be made odious forsver. I was raised in a country lying along the border States, thank God, a border to longer. [Great applause.] We were called the Border States because we marked the lines between freedom and slavery. To-day, as one of the results of this war, there breathes not a slavery. To-day, as one of the results of this war, there breathes not as lavery. To-day, as one of the results of this war, there breathes not as lavery. To-day, as one of the results of this war, there breathes not as lavery. To-day, as one of the results of this war, there breathes not as lavery. To-day, as one of the results of this war, there breathes not as lavery as demonstrated in the fact that the voice of the people shall rule. It has never done so before. It has never done so before. Schools must and will be opened. The people must learn, however humble or poor. Let us carry out the doctrine that the loyal shall rule, and extend that beneficient system of educational influences which pervaded the Northern States, and which has made them what they are. Extend such influences throughout the South, and that people will never again be dragged into miseries like those of the rebellion. That people must be educated, educated in the right. My fellow-citizens, a previous speaker has

While the war raged, and when federal bayonets were powerful in the State of Kentucky, the loyal people were secure, and they passed a law by which they perpetuated the exclusion from the tranchise of all men who had engaged in treason or gave aid and comfort to the enemies of their country. They excluded them from participating in the political affairs of the State. After the war, the people of Kentucky, in their leniency and in their kludness of heart, urface several times. Directly across the creek from this well is the political affairs of the State. After the war, the people of Kentucky, in their leniency and in their kindness of heart, repealed that law. Now, not only the Legislative departments, but the whole judicial system of the State is in the hands of traitors or their symputhizers. Treason is made respectable there, and loyalty odious. This is the result of all this leniency. And even the Legislature of Kentncky, to carry out the organized persecutions of the courts of law, have now a statute upon their books by which service in the federal army is no defence to a suit brough against a party for any injury done by him, though in the legitimate exercise of his duties in the service. And at the same time it should be remembered that similar service in the rebelarmy is made earth and going through rook—but not the rock.

made that the benefit of the act should extend to loyal soldiers, it was voted down by a majority of more than three to one. That will be your fate if you permit these reconstructed men to go back into power. [Applause.] I dure say that such is their desire to-day in this State. But you must stand firm. You have a wily foe to contend with. I would rather trust a traitor who foughtin arms than such men. I know, my fellow-citizens, there is a greatnoise in the land because Congress don't do something. Do something for what? Can anybody answer the question? And when it is answered, why let the South come back. For what? To submit to the laws we have made. They say they are all unconstitutional. Of course, then, they are not willing to submit to them. It would simply lead to a recurrence of such scenes as we have had in the past. They say they have not been guilty of anything to their discredit. But they will come back to seize the helm of the State and to persecute loyal men. Should we hasten to do that? We are trying to contrive some plan by which we can rule them. Because we have not done it in four months do not be discouraged. We will do it in time. We want to lay the foundation deep, and solid, and sure, so that the winds may blow them from every quarter against the structure, any never shake it. [Great applause.]

Funeral of the Victims—A Sad Sight.

The Philadelphia Leiger gives an account of the funeral of the Dearing family at Philadelphia, on Saturday. The victims were laid out in a room in the house of Mr. Gartland, the undertaker. Every possible facility was: given to view the bodies, and at one time a line formed outside of the house extended to Chesnut street. Visitors farnished with tiekets had easy access to the house, and had full opportunity to see the remains, all of which were handsomely clothed and coffined, and the faces of which were plainly visible by the light of the candles burning at the head of the first range, and of the chandeller over them.

It is my purpose to give to the people a disinterested, impartial and, therefore, reliable account of things as I myself have seen them. I shall report nothing on "hearsay"—and you will be sate in swallowing the dose I am about to administer, without danger to yourself, or to the credit of the undersigned.

Late in the atternoon I reached the notorious spot. I thought of Moses when he received his orders to take his shoes from off his feet, because he was standing upon hollely ground. From where I stood I could look up three ravines, and oil wells in every direction presented themselves. I will give a correct description of all that I have seen, commencing with the first and going in regular order to the last. The first well that I saw was the KIMERLY WELL. This is being put through by Scott & Co. It is situated on the Peyton farm, and is a few yards east of the Brombaugh well. The contract on this hole is for 150 feet. It is forty-six feet deep at present, with a good prospect. A few yards east of the Gen. Leggett well is the

This well is being sunk on the lease of Mr. Kimberly. The harm from which the lease was taken belongs to Mr. Wallace. The well is now 67 feet deep. They do not look for oil short of 100 feet. A bout 100 feet N. E. from this well, upon the farm of Mr. Davis, is GEN, GRANT WELL, owned by Scott & Co. This is fifty-five feet deep, and has a fine prospect; gas has come from this well in considerable quantities. It is on the Kavenaugh farm. A few yards farther east is the THOBURN WELL,

The prospects are good; gas has come up, and the indications are generally good. Next I visited the RITCHIE WELLS, NO. ONE AND TWO. This is owned by a McConnelsville Company, under the firm of Bowers & Co. This well is 107 feet deep, but as yet, the oil rock is not reached; it cannot be far off, however. A few yards further N. These wells are owned by Messrs. Ritchie & Baughman. No. 1 is 126 feet deep. This was commenced the 9th of last March, and was abandoned for a time. Preparations are now being made to work it by steam. No. 2 belongs to the same gentlemen, and is near No. 1 on the Dye farm. The contract is for 150 feet. The well is 73 feet deep at present. Both these wells are but a few yards froin the famous Mecca wells and they are boring with strong hopes of success. I will close with this well.

There are a great many more new ones on my list for to-morrow, several of which are successful ones, and one a regular squirter.

Business is generally brisk in these quarters at present, All are busy in sinking wells which will doubtless speak for themselves in a short time. KUHN WELLS.

Mr. J. I. Kuhn owns these leases and is sinking two wells. The eastern one is 77 feet 7½ inches deep. The western one is 57 feet 7½ inches deep. The western one is 56 feet deep.
